The Northern Agriculture and Forestry College (NAFC) is educating young Lao people from the Northern Provinces in upland agriculture. It is a centre for skills-based education & training. The college is committed to develop proficiency in sustainable agricultural production within an attractive and inclusive study environment.

The campus in Ban Pakseuang – 25 km north of Luang Prabang town in the former king’s gardens - is now home to a multitude of small farm units for practical skills building in agronomy, livestock & fisheries, forestry and agri-business. There, the students apply the classroom theory in practice. As an important added benefit, the farm units provide income generating opportunities for the students.

These products are produced by the students and teachers from the Food Processing Group. A share of the revenue goes directly back to the students to support their living cost during studies.
